Hi,

Day thirty-one; one Fantastic Day!

I normally accumulate three days before send my emails. Today is different! We had one GREAT day today.

We started out with breakfast at our B&B; from there it was one great experience after another. I am sending this after one day because I wanted to include a number of photos. We started our day with a Dolphin Watch cruise. The cruise took one and one half hours and we sailed across Jervis Bay. It was a beautiful ride over and back, not a cloud in the sky, and we saw a lot of Dolphins on the other side of the bay.

Next we drove into Booderee National Park and visited a number of lookout points, including the location of the old Cape St. George Lighthouse; now just ruins. To get to many of the points we had to take dirt roads; you should see the rental car. Dirty is an understatement! Along the way we spotted two Kangaroos along the road side. Walking back to our car from one of the lookout points, while paying attention to my camera, not where I was going, I almost walked into a Kangaroo with baby in pouch. The ocean views at each of the points were stunning. I could have spent the whole day in the park.

Before going to dinner tonight we asked Adam, the B&B manager, for a good restaurant. He suggested two and we chose the StoneGrill. Some of you may have had this experience, but it was new to us. We all ordered filet steak that was served raw on a hot stone. We cooked the steaks at the table to our own desire; mine being extra rare. The steak was great and it was a fun experience. Joyce's vegetables came under cooked, so Esther suggested cooking them on the stone; she did. By the time we left, the restaurant was packed.

Enjoy a few to the photos of today's experiences; not included in the website version. Tomorrow it is off to our last location, Sydney.
